FUN BOX!

Old-school gaming perfected, with the greatest machine ever invented

Before they deteriorated into the Dance Dance Revolution playgrounds that they are today, video arcades were a place where a boy could safely unleash his hatred for Dad on a plethora of coin-op button-punchers. Today, you can avoid the dance gangs by playing at home on the ClassiCade Cocktail Arcade System, a computer disguised as a sit-down table from gaming's quarter-bloated past. Upon boot-up, the 1.6 GHz, Windows XP PC loads a menu of games, which includes Asteroids, Missile Command and Tetris. And while the system ships with only 20 titles, thousands more can be downloaded for free—just like your favorite music!
